The Weiss Balanced Program

The government's recent efforts to boost the flow of credit and reduce interest rates helped spur a rally in riskier assets beginning in March. The rally was sustained through quarter's end. However, policy mistakes — such as supporting the bondholders of large, technically insolvent financial institutions at taxpayer expense — may eventually prolong the downturn and push sustainable economic recovery further out into the future, in our view.

Economic conditions appeared to improve somewhat late in the first quarter of 2009, but a sustained recovery isn't likely until the housing market finally bottoms. While housing starts did move a bit higher off extreme lows recently, due to falling home prices and lower interest rates, the supply of unsold homes remains near record levels. Tight credit conditions persist, indicating more housing weakness is possible.

Given these uncertainties, The Weiss Balanced Program maintained a moderately defensive and well-diversified portfolio during the quarter. Our effective equity exposure, at around 35% of portfolio assets at quarter end, was well below the program's highest potential allocation of 60%.

Our equity holdings are mainly invested in diversified, large-cap, dividend paying U.S. companies, which tend to perform better than the overall market in difficult times. Going into the second quarter, we continue to hold an inverse equity fund as a hedge against declines in our stock holdings. We also boosted our international holdings during the quarter, purchasing a mutual fund with excellent long-term potential at an attractive price.

Fixed income holdings (35% of assets) produced solid cash flow this quarter, providing necessary diversification in challenging times, and price performance has improved as credit markets stabilized in recent months. We still see attractive value in select bond markets, since many are priced for a worse-case economic scenario. Once liquidity fully returns, quality fixed-income prices should improve, in our opinion, creating solid upside opportunities.

Looking ahead, the economy's rate of decline may improve later this year, thanks to unprecedented government efforts, and so financial markets could potentially find a

The Weiss Balanced Program Highlights

- ▶ The goal of this program is to provide an appropriate combination of active management and investment selections, broad asset class diversification, and the potential for stable returns.
- ▶ During down-trending markets, we have the ability to adjust the portfolio's allocation by reducing equity exposure to minimize the impact of market declines on returns.
- ▶ In addition, we seek to take advantage of falling stock prices by investing in inverse securities designed to appreciate in value during periods of market weakness.
- ▶ Risk management is a critical component of this strategy and we proactively perform account rebalancing, as necessary, to assure appropriate balance of risk and reward.
