The Weiss Balanced Program

The economy and financial markets began to stabilize during the second quarter, thanks to the extraordinary fiscal and monetary stimulus put in place by the Federal Reserve and U.S. Treasury. While stock performance has indeed been impressive (S&P 500 up nearly +40% from early March lows), it is critical to keep things in perspective.

The financial markets overshot to the downside in late 2008 and early 2009 as economic conditions plunged after the Lehman failure. "Overshoots" cannot persist indefinitely, and it is not surprising to see a recovery from such negative extremes. We may indeed see some growth over the next several quarters, thanks to further government stimulus and temporary tax cut benefits.

However, in our view, for equity and fixed income markets to continue their recent strong performance, sustained economic expansion must take hold. Unfortunately, strong growth will be hard to come by given the likelihood of subdued consumer spending growth and unprecedented wealth destruction alongside a banking system that remains very much impaired.

Faced with this unsettling environment, we think investors should focus on maintaining a well-balanced investment portfolio, including several asset classes. This is our objective with the Weiss Balanced Program. On the equity side, we currently own quality companies that, at today's depressed prices, offer rewarding long-term total return potential in our view. We own several international equity mutual funds at present, with superb long-term performance that we believe will also prove rewarding.

The program's fixed income holdings continue to produce solid cash flow, providing necessary diversification in challenging times. Performance continued to improve during the second quarter as credit markets stabilized. However, even though credit spreads have declined substantially, benefiting our positions, we remain concerned that the actual flow of credit in the economy continues to be virtually non-existent as banks remain wary to lend. As such, we are monitoring our positions closely and will make adjustments as necessary.

Looking ahead, a weak recovery could take

The Weiss Balanced Program Highlights

- ▶ The goal of this program is to provide an appropriate combination of active management and investment selections, broad asset class diversification, and the potential for stable returns.
- ▶ During down-trending markets, we have the ability to adjust the portfolio's allocation by reducing equity exposure to minimize the impact of market declines on returns.
- ▶ In addition, we seek to take advantage of falling stock prices by investing in inverse securities designed to appreciate in value during periods of market weakness.
- ▶ Risk management is a critical component of this strategy and we proactively perform account rebalancing, as necessary, to assure appropriate balance of risk and reward.

hold for the economy in the coming months that has not been fully discounted yet in stock prices. However, given our view that the longer-term remains highly uncertain, we view rising equity prices as cyclical in nature within a longer-term secular bear market.
